The European Doctorate in Law and Economics, jointly with the University of Hamburg and the University of Rotterdam, is addressed to students coming from European as well as non-EU countries, with broad cultural views and international study experiences, who have already acquired specific skills in the economic or legal fields, with preference to those that have developed post-graduate education in the field of the economic analysis of law.

As for the scientific profile, the program counts on several distinguished scholars in Law and Economics, in most of the main areas of the discipline, including competition law, family law, contract law, corporate law, intellectual property law, public law, regulation, securities law, and torts law.
